Fetology Chicago is a one-day virtual event in fetal medicine on September 9, 2021. The focus of the educational event will be on the multi-disciplinary approach to evaluation, care and intervention for a spectrum of congenital diseases including spina bifida, TTTS, congenital pulmonary airway malformation, and congenital heart disease. The program will also include a special topic update on COVID-19 and pregnancy.

The curriculum is designed for obstetricians, maternal fetal medicine specialists, neonatologists, cardiologists, radiologists, sonographers, nurses, pediatric surgical specialists, genetic counselors, and other perinatal specialists and staff.

EDUCATIONAL OBJECTIVES

- Discuss recent advancement in the treatment of common fetal conditions that are amenable to fetal surgery
- Describe the evidence that currently exists for the practice of fetal intervention
- Identify current knowledge gaps that limit broader application of fetal surgery
- Characterize innovative approaches currently used in the study of fetal intervention
- Review the indications, outcomes and future directions in congenital heart disease diagnosis and research
- Identify the clinical manifestations of COVID-19 in high risk pregnancy
